THE WORLD

By J.C. Ryle

*“Come out from among them and be separate, says the Lord.
Do not touch what is unclean, and I will receive you.”
(2 Corinthians 6:17)*

The scripture which heads this page reveals a duty of vital importance to the Christian. It declares the inescapable duty of the Christian’s separation from the world. This is the point which the Apostle Paul had in view when he wrote to the Corinthians, “Come out from among them and be separate.”

This duty of separation from the world demands the absolute attention of all who call themselves Christians. Separation from the world has been one of the grand evidences of a work of grace in the heart of every true believer. Throughout the Church age, those that have been born of the Spirit, and made a new creature in Christ Jesus, have always endeavored to “come out from among the world,” and live a separated life. Many have worn the name “Christian”, but without the reality, and have refused to come out and be separate from the world.

Present day Christianity reveals the essential need for this separation. Today’s widespread desire is to make things pleasant in Christianity; to saw off the corners and edges of the cross, and to avoid, as far as possible, self-denial. Everywhere we hear professing Christians declaring loudly that we must not be “too narrow and exclusive.” By their lifestyle they profess that there is nothing wrong with participating in that which the holiest of saints rejected as bad for the soul. Unfortunately, thousands proclaim we may go anywhere, do anything, spend our time in anything, read anything, keep any company, plunge into anything, and all the while still be good Christians.

In a day like this I think it is good to raise a warning voice and bring attention to the teaching of God's Word. It is written in that Word, "Come out from among them and be separate." There are four points which I will try to show my readers, in examining this vital subject.

First, the world is a source of great danger to the soul

Second, what is not meant by separation from the world.

Third, what real separation from the world consists.

Fourth, the secret of victory over the world.

And now before I go further, let me warn every reader that he will never understand this subject unless he first understands what a true Christian is. If you are one of those unhappy people who think everybody is a Christian who attends a place of worship, no matter how he lives, or what he believes, I fear you will care little about separation from the world. But if you read the Bible, and are serious about your soul, you will know there are two classes of professing Christians - the converted and unconverted. Just as the Jews were a people set apart from the other nations, so, too, must the true Christian be a "peculiar people" under the Gospel. There must be a difference between believers and unbelievers. To you, therefore, I make a special appeal this day. While many avoid the subject of separation from the world, and many absolutely hate it, and many are puzzled by it, give me your attention while I try to show you this principle.

1. The World is a Source of Great Danger to the Soul."

By "the world," I do not mean the material world on the face of which we are living and moving. He that pretends to say that anything which God has created in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, is in itself harmful to man's soul, says that which is unreasonable and absurd. On the contrary the sun, moon, and stars - the mountains, valleys, and plains - the seas, lakes, and rivers - the animal and vegetable creation - are in themselves “very good” (Genesis 1:31). They are full of lessons of God’s wisdom and power, and all proclaim daily, “The hand that made us is Divine.” The idea that “matter” is in itself sinful and corrupt is a foolish heresy.

When I speak of “the world” in this article, I mean those people who think only, or chiefly, of this world’s things, and neglect the world to come—the people who are always thinking more of earth than of heaven, more of time than of eternity, more of body than the soul, more of pleasing man than of pleasing God. It is of them and their ways, habits, customs, opinions, practices, tastes, aims, spirit, and tone, that I am speaking when I speak of “the world.” This is the world from which Paul tells us to “Come out from among them and be separate.”

Now “the world,” in this sense, is an enemy of the soul. There are three things which a true Christian must renounce and give up, and three enemies which he must fight with and resist. These three are the flesh, the devil, and “the world.” All three are terrible foes, and all three must be overcome if we would be saved.

Let us turn to the testimony of the Holy Scriptures. If the texts I am about to quote do not prove the world is a source of danger to the soul, then there is no meaning in words.

Let us hear what the Apostle Paul says: “And do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God” (Romans 12:2).

“Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit who is from God, that we might know the things that have been freely given to us by God” (1 Corinthians 2:12).

“Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil age, according to the will of our God and Father” (Galatians 1:4).

“You were dead in your trespasses and sins, in which you once walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of power of the air, the spirit who now works in the sons of disobedience” (Ephesians 2:1-2).

“For Demas has forsaken me, having loved this present world, and has departed for Thessalonica—Crescens for Galatia, Titus for Dalmatia” (2 Timothy 4:10).

Let us hear what James says:

“Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their trouble, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world” (James 1:27).

“Adulterers and adulteresses! Do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself any enemy of God” (James 4:4).

Let us hear what John says:

“Do not love the world or things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world—the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life—is not of the Father but is of the world. And the world is passing away, and the lust of it; but he who does the will of God abides forever” (1 John 2:15-17).

“Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed on us, that we should be called children of God! Therefore, the world does not know us, because it did not know Him” (1 John 3:1).

“They are of the world. Therefore they speak as of the world, and the world hears them”(1 John 4:5).

“For whatever is born of God overcomes the world. And this is the victory that has overcome the world—our faith” (1 John 5:4).

“We know that we are of God, and the whole world lies under the sway of the wicked one” (1 John 5:19).

Let us hear, lastly, what the Lord Jesus Christ says:

“Now he who received seed among the thorns is he who hears the word, and the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becomes unfruitful” (Matthew 13:22).

“And He said to them, you are from beneath; I am from above. You are of this world; I am not of this world” (John 8:23).

“If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you” (John 15:18).

“And I will pray the Father, and He will give you another Helper, that He may abide with you forever—the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it neither sees Him nor knows Him; but you know Him, for He dwells with you and will be with you” (John 14:16-17).

“If you were of the world, the world would love its own. Yet because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, therefore the world hates you” (John 15:19).

“These things I have spoken to you, that in Me you may have peace. In the world you will have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world” (John 16:33).

“I do not pray that You should take them out of the world, but that You should keep them from the evil one. They are not of the world, just as I am not of the world” (John 17:15-16).

I make no comment on these texts. They speak for themselves. If anyone can read them carefully, and fail to see that “the world” is an enemy to the Christian's soul, and that there is an utter opposition between the friendship of the world and the friendship of Christ, he is past the reach of argument, and it is a waste of time to reason with him. To my eyes they contain a lesson as clear as the sun at noon day.

I turn from Scriptures to matters of fact and experience. I appeal to any Christian who keeps his eyes open, and knows what is going on in the Churches. I ask him whether it is true that nothing damages the cause of Christianity so much as "the world?" It is not open sin, or open unbelief, which robs Christ of His professing servants, so much as the love of the world, the fear of the world, the cares of the world, the business of the world, the money of the world, the pleasures of the world, and the desire to make friends with the world. This is a great rock which thousands of young people are continually being crushed by. They don't object to any of the truths of the Christian faith. They do not deliberately choose evil, and openly rebel against God. They hope somehow to get to heaven in the end; and they think it is proper to have some religion. But they cannot give up their idol: they must have the world. And so after running well and longing for heaven while boys and girls, they turn aside when they become men and women, and go down the broad way which leads to destruction. They begin with Abraham and Moses, and end with Demas and Lot's wife.

Judgment day, alone, will prove how many souls "the world" has slain. Millions will be found to have been trained in Christian homes, and to have known the Gospel from their very childhood, and yet missed heaven. They left the harbor of home with bright prospects and launched forth on the ocean of life with a father's blessing and a mother's prayers, and then turned from the right course through the seductions of the world, and ended their voyage on the reef and in misery. It is a sorrowful story to tell; but it is all too common! I can clearly see why Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate.”

2. What Does Not Constitute Separation From the World

This principle is one which requires clearing up. There are many mistakes about it. You will sometimes see sincere and well-meaning Christians doing things which God never intended them to do in the matter of separation from the world, and honestly believing that they are in the very will of God. Their mistakes often do them great harm. They give wicked people opportunity to ridicule Christianity, and supply them with an excuse when having none. They cause the way of truth to be evil spoken of and add to the offense of the cross. I think it a plain duty to make a few remarks on the subject. We must never forget that it is possible to be very dedicated, and to think we are “doing God service,” when in reality we are making some great mistakes. There is such a thing as having a “zeal that is not based on knowledge” (Romans 10:2), for example, “A time is coming when anyone who kills you will think he is offering a service to God” (John 16:2). It is so important to pray for a right judgment and sanctified common sense about separation from the world.

When Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians ought to give up all worldly callings, trades, professions and business. He did not forbid men to be soldiers, sailors, lawyers, doctors, merchants, bankers, shopkeepers or tradesmen. There is not a word in the New Testament to justify such a line of conduct. Cornelius the centurion (soldier), Luke the physician, Zenas the lawyer, are examples to the contrary. Idleness is in itself a sin. A lawful calling is a remedy against temptation. “If a man will not work, he shall not eat” (2 Thessalonians 3:10). To give up any business of life which is not necessarily sinful to the wicked and the devil, from fear of getting harm from it, is lazy, cowardly conduct. The right plan is to carry our Christianity into our business, and not to give up business under the false pretense that it interferes with our Christianity.

When Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians ought to decline all association with unconverted people, and refuse to go into their society. There is no warrant for such conduct in the New Testament. Our Lord and His disciples did not refuse to go to a marriage feast, or to sit at dinner in the home of a Pharisee. Paul does not say, “If some unbeliever invites you to a meal,” you must not go, but only tells us how to behave if we do go (1Corinthians 10:27). Moreover, it is a dangerous thing to begin judging people too closely, and deciding who are converted and who are not, and what society is godly and what ungodly. We are sure to make mistakes. Above all, such a course of life would cut us off from many opportunities of doing good. If we carry our Master with us wherever we go, who can tell but we may “save some,” and not be harmed? “To the weak I became weak, to win the weak. I have become all things to all men so that by all possible means I might save some” (1 Corinthians 9:22).

When Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians ought to take no interest in anything on earth except religion. To neglect science, art, literature, and politics—to read nothing which is not directly spiritual—to know nothing about what is going on among mankind, and never to look at a newspaper—to care nothing about the government of one’s country, and to be utterly indifferent as to the persons who guide it, counsels and make its laws—all this may seem very right and proper in the eyes of some people. But I think that it is an idle, selfish neglect of duty. Paul knew the value of good government as one of the main helps to our “living peaceful and quiet lives in all godliness and holiness” (1 Timothy 2:2). Paul was not ashamed to read heathen writers, and to quote their words in his speeches and writings. Paul did not think it beneath him to show an acquaintance with the laws and customs and callings of the world, in the illustrations he gave from them. Christians who pride themselves on their ignorance of secular things are precisely the Christians who bring Christianity into contempt. I knew the case of a blacksmith who would not come to hear his clergyman preach the Gospel, until he found out that he knew the properties of iron. Then he came.

When Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians should be strange and odd in their dress, manners, demeanor and voice. Anything which attracts notice in these matters is most objectionable, and ought to be carefully avoided, To wear clothes of such a color, or made in such a fashion, that when you go into company every eye is fixed on you, and you are the object of general observation, is an enormous mistake. It gives occasion to the wicked to ridicule Christianity, and looks self-righteous and unnatural. There is not the slightest proof that our Lord and His apostles, and Priscilla, and Persis and their companions, did not dress and behave just like others in their own ranks of life. On the other hand, one of the many charges our Lord brings against the Pharisees was that of “making their phylacteries wide and the tassels on their garments long, “so as to be seen by men” (Matthew 23:5). True sanctity and sanctimoniousness are entirely different things. Those who try to show their unworldliness by wearing conspicuously ugly clothes, or by speaking in a whining, snuffling voice, or by affecting an unnatural slavishness, humility, and gravity of manner, miss their mark altogether, and only give occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme.

When Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians ought to retire from the company of mankind, and shut themselves up in solitude. It is one of the crying errors of the Roman Catholic Church to suppose that eminent holiness is to be attained by such practices. It is the unhappy delusion of the whole army of monks, nuns and hermits. Separation of this kind is not according to the mind of Christ. He says distinctly in His last prayer, “My prayer is not that you take them out of the world but that you protect them from the evil one” (John 17:15). There is not a word in acts or the Epistles to recommend such a separation. True believers are always represented as mixing in the world, doing their duty in it, and glorifying God by patience, meekness, purity, and courage in their various positions, and not by cowardly desertion to them.

Moreover, it is foolish to suppose that we can keep the world and the devil out of our hearts by going into caves and corners. True Christianity and unworldliness are best seen not in timidly forsaking the post which God has given to us, but in boldly standing our ground, and showing the power of grace to overcome evil.

Last, but not least, when Paul says, “Come out from among them and be separate,” he did not mean that Christians ought to withdraw from every Church in which there are unconverted members, or to refuse to worship in company with any who are not believers, or to keep away from the Lord’s table if any ungodly people go up to it. This is a very common but a grievous mistake. There is not a text in the New Testament to justify it, and it ought to be condemned as a pure invention of man. Our Lord Jesus Christ deliberately allowed Judas Iscariot to be an apostle for three years, and gave him the Lord’s Supper. He has taught us, in the parable of the wheat and tares, that converted and unconverted will be together till the harvest, and cannot be divided (Matthew 13:30). In His Epistles to the Seven Churches, and in all Paul’s Epistles, we often see faults and corruptions mentioned and reprov’d; but we are never told that they justify desertion of the assembly, or the neglect of the Lord’s table. In short, we must not look for a perfect Church, a perfect congregation, and a perfect company of communicants until the Marriage Supper for the Lamb. If others are unworthy Churchgoers or unworthy partakers of the Lord's Supper, the sin is theirs and not ours: we are not their judges. But to separate ourselves from Church assemblies, and deprive ourselves of the Lord's Supper because others use them unworthily, is to take up a foolish, unreasonable, and unscriptural position. It is not the mind of Christ, and it certainly is not Paul's idea of separation from the world.

I commend these six points to the calm consideration of all who wish to understand the subject of separation from the world. Far more might be said about each and every one of them than I have space to say in this article. I have seen so many mistakes made about each one of them, and so much misery and unhappiness caused by those mistakes, that I want to put Christians on their guard. I don't want them not to take up positions carelessly, in the zeal of their love, which they will afterwards have to give up.

I leave this part of my subject with two pieces of advice, which I offer especially to young Christians.

I advise them, for one thing, if they really desire to come out from the world, to remember that the shortest path is not always the path of duty. To argue with our unconverted relatives, to "avoid" all our old friends, to withdraw entirely from mixed society, to live an exclusive life, to give up every act of courtesy and civility in order that we may devote ourselves to the direct work of Christ—all this may seem very right, and may satisfy our consciences and save us trouble. But it is often a selfish, lazy, self-pleasing line of conduct, and the true cross and true line of duty should be to deny ourselves, and adopt a very different course of action.

I advise them, for another thing, if they want to come out from the world, to guard against a sour, morose, ungenial, gloomy, and unpleasant demeanor. And to never forget that there is such a thing as "winning without a word." (1 Peter 3:1) – "Wives, in the same way be submissive to your husbands so that, if any of them do not believe the Word, they may be won over without words by the behavior of their wives.” Let them strive to show people that their principles, whatever may be thought of them, make them cheerful, amiable, good-tempered, unselfish, considerate of others, and ready to take an interest in everything that is innocent and of good report. In short, let there be no needless separation between us and the world. In many things, as I will soon show, we must be separate; but let us take care that it is separation of the right kind. If the world is offended by such separation, we cannot help it. But let us never give the world occasion to say that our separation is foolish, senseless, ridiculous, unreasonable, uncharitable and unscriptural.

3. What True Separation from the World Really Is

I take up this part of my subject with a very deep sense of its difficulty. It is evident from the Scriptures that there is a line of conduct which all true Christians ought to pursue with respect to “the world, and the things of the world.” The texts already quoted make that plain. The key to the solution of that question lies in the word “separation”. In what separation consists of is not easy to show. On some points it is easy to lay down particular rules, on others it is impossible to do more than state general principles, and leave everyone to apply them according to his position in life. This is what I will attempt to do.

First and foremost, he that desires to “come out from among the world, and be separate,” must steadily and habitually refuse to be guided by the world’s standard of right and wrong.”

The rule of the mass of mankind is to go with the stream, to do as others to follow the fashion, to keep in with the common opinion, and to set your watch by the town clock. The true Christian will never be content with such a rule as that. He will simply ask, “What does the Scripture say? What is written in the Word of God?” He will maintain firmly that nothing can be right which God says is wrong, and that the customs and opinions of his neighbors can never make something unimportant which God calls serious, or says something is not sin which God calls sin. He will never think lightly of such sins as drinking, swearing, gambling, lying, cheating, swindling, or dishonoring of the Lord's Day, because they are common sins and many say, "Where is the harm?" That miserable argument, "Everybody thinks this way, everybody says so, everybody does it, everybody will be there," means nothing to him. Is it condemned or approved by the Bible? That is his only question. If he must stand alone in the town, or congregation, he will not go against the Bible. If he has to come out from the crowd, and take a position by himself, he will not flinch from it rather than disobey the Bible. This is genuine Scriptural separation.

He that desires to "come out from among the world and be separate," must be very careful how he spends his leisure time."

This is a point which at first sight appears of little importance. But the longer I live, the more I am persuaded that it deserves most serious attention. Honorable occupation and lawful business are a great safeguard to the soul and the time that is spent in them is comparatively the time of our least danger. The devil finds it hard to get a hearing from a busy man. But when the days work is over and the time of leisure arrives, then comes the hour of temptation.

I do not hesitate to warn every man who wants to live a Christian life to be very careful how he spends his evenings. Evening is the time when we are naturally disposed to relax after the labors of the day; and evening is the time when the Christian is too often tempted to lay aside his armor and consequently brings trouble on his soul. "Then comes the devil," with "the devil world." Evening is the time when the poor man is tempted to go to the bar and fall into sin. Evening is the time when the workman too often sits for hours hearing and seeing things which do him no good. Evening is the time which the higher classes choose for dancing, gambling, and the like; and consequently never get to bed till late at night. If we love our souls, and would not become worldly, let us be careful how we spend our evenings. Tell me how a man spends his evenings, and I can generally tell what his character is.

The true Christian will do well to make it a settled rule never to “waste” his evenings. Whatever others may do, let him resolve always to make time for quiet, calm thoughtful meditation while reading the Word and in prayer. This habit will prove a hard one to keep. It may bring on him the charge of being unsociable and overly strict. Let him not mind this. Anything of this kind is better than habitual late hours in carousing, hurried prayers, superficial Bible reading, and a bad conscience. Even if he stands alone in his church or town let him not depart from his godly lifestyle. He will find himself in a minority, and be thought an eccentric person. But this is genuine Scriptural separation.

He that desires to “come out from among them and be separate,” “must steadily and habitually determine not to be swallowed up and absorbed in the business of the world.”

A true Christian will strive to do his duty in whatever station or position he finds himself, and to do it well. Whether statesman, or merchant, or banker, or lawyer, or doctor, or tradesman, or farmer, he will try to do his work so that no one can find occasion for fault in him. But he will not allow it to get between him and Christ. If he finds his business beginning to eat up his Sundays, his Bible-reading, his private prayer time, and to bring clouds between him and heaven, he will say, “Stand back! There is a limit. This is as far as you can go, and no further. I cannot sell my soul for position, fame, or gold.” Like Daniel, he will deny himself anything rather than lose his Bible-reading and his prayers. In all this he will find he stands almost alone. Many will laugh at him, and tell him they get along just fine without being so strict and particular. He will not listen. He will resolutely hold the world at arm’s length, whatever present loss or sacrifice it may seem to entail. He will choose rather to be less rich and prosperous in this world, than to forsake the prosperity of his soul. To stand alone in this way, to run counter to the ways of others, requires immense self-denial. But this is genuine Scriptural separation.

He that desires to “come out from among them and be separate” must steadily “abstain from all amusements and recreations which are inseparably connected to sin.

This is a hard subject to handle, and I approach it with pain. But I do not think I would be faithful to Christ, and faithful to my office as a minister, if I did not speak very plainly about it, in considering such a matter as separation from the world.

Conscience no doubt is a strange thing, and every man must judge for himself and use his liberty. One man sees no harm in things which another regards with abhorrence as evil. Frankly, I cannot understand how anyone who makes a pretense to real vital Christianity can allow himself to attend horse races and theater. That to look at horses running at full speed is in itself perfectly harmless until you start laying the Lord’s money on the line. Many plays such as Shakespeare’s, are among the finest productions of the human intellect but lack benefit to the soul. I assert that you cannot go to these forms of amusement without helping sin.

I urge all professing Christians to remember this and to take heed what they do. I warn them plainly that they have no right to shut their eyes to facts which every intelligent person knows, for the mere pleasure of seeing a horse-race, or listening to good actors and actresses. I warn them that they must not talk of separation from the world, if they can sanction amusements, and fornication. These are the things “God will judge,” and which “result in death!” (Hebrews 13:4; Romans 6:21).

These are hard words! But are they not true? It may seem to your relatives and friends very strait-laced, strict, and narrow, if you tell them you cannot go to the races or the theater [movies] with them. But we must fall back on first principles. Is the world a danger to the soul, or is it not? Are we to come out from the world, or are we not? These are questions which can only be answered in one way. If we love our souls we must have nothing to do with amusements which are bound up with sin. Nothing short of this can be called genuine Scriptural separation from the world.

I would like to note here that thoughtful and intelligent readers will probably observe that, under the heading of worldly amusements, I have said nothing about dancing and card-playing. They are delicate and difficult subjects, but I am quite willing to give my opinion, and the more so because I do not speak of them without experience in the days of my youth.

Concerning “dancing”, Solomon says, “there is a time to dance” (Ecclesiastes 3:4). David danced before the ark. To say there is anything morally wrong in the mere bodily act of dancing would be absurd. In the night clubs of today, however, dancing promotes sensual and fleshly movements and actions. This amusement involves very late hours, lude dressing, and an immense amount of frivolity, vanity, jealousy, unhealthy excitement, and vain conversation. Who would like to be found in this place when the Lord comes again.

Concerning card-playing and gambling, my attitude is much the same. I ask Christian people to consider its tendencies and consequences. Of course it would be nonsense to say there is positive wickedness in an innocent game of cards for diversion, and not for money. Sometimes, however, a simple game of cards can turn into a desperate gambling habit. “Madam,” said Romaine to an old lady, who declared she could not make it without her cards—

“Madam, if this is the case, cards are your god, and your god is a very poor one.” It would be better for her to refrain in this matter.

Concerning “Sports,” I admit that it is not easy to lay down a strict rule. I cannot go to the length of some, and say that galloping across the country, or shooting grouse, partridges, or pheasants, or catching salmon or trout, are in themselves positively sinful occupations and distinct marks of an unconverted heart, but much does depend on the company you keep while participating in the sport. Christians should not be addicted to any sport or activity but to be “moderate in all things.” If we would be successful in the Christian life; than those that are addicted to sports should not forget this principle.

The question, however, is one about which Christians must be careful in expressing an opinion, and moderate in their judgments. The man who can neither ride nor shoot, nor throw a fly, is hardly qualified to speak dispassionately about such matters. It is cheap and easy work to condemn others for doing things which you cannot do yourself, and are utterly unable to enjoy! One thing only is perfectly certain - all overindulgence or excess is sin. The man who is wholly absorbed in sports, and spends all his years in such a manner that he seems to think God only created him to be a “hunting, shooting, and fishing animal,” is a man who at present knows very little of Scriptural Christianity. It is written, “Where your treasure is, there your heart will be also (Matthew 6:21).

He that desires to “come out from among them and be separate,” must be “moderate in the use of lawful and innocent recreations.”

No sensible Christian will ever think of condemning all recreations. In a world of work and stress like the one that we live in, occasional relaxation is good for everyone. Body and mind alike require seasons of lighter occupation, and opportunities of letting off high spirits especially in the young. Exercise itself is a positive necessity for the preservation of mental and bodily health. I see no harm in field sports, rowing, running, and other athletic recreations. I find no fault with those who play chess and other such games of skill. We are all fearfully and wonderfully made. No wonder the Poet says, "Strange that a harp of a thousand strings should keep in tune so long!"

Anything which strengthens nerves, and brain, and digestion, and lungs and muscles, and makes us more fit for Christ's work, so long as it is not in itself sinful, is a blessing, and ought to be thankfully used. Anything which will occasionally divert our thoughts from their usual grinding path, in a healthy manner is a good and not an evil.

But it is the excess of these innocent things which a true Christian must watch against, if he wants to be separate from the world. He must not devote his whole heart, soul, mind, strength, and time to them, as many do, if he wishes to serve Christ. There are hundreds of lawful things which are good in moderation, but bad when taken in excess. Healthful medicine taken in small quantities is good, but some if taken in large quantities are poisonous to the body. In nothing is this so true as it is in the matter of recreations. The use of them is one thing, the abuse of them is another. The Christian who uses them must know when to stop, and how to say "Enough!" Do they interfere with his private religion? Do they take up too much of his thoughts and attention? Have they a secularizing effect on his soul? Have they a tendency to pull him down to earth? Then let him be very careful. All this require courage, self-denial, and firmness. It is a line of conduct which will often bring on us the ridicule and contempt of those who don't know what moderation is, and who spend their lives in making trifles serious things and serious things trifles. But if we mean to come out from the world we must not mind this. We must be "temperate" even in lawful things, whatever others may think of us. This is genuine Scriptural separation.

Last, but not least, he that desires to “come out from among them and be separate” must be careful in friendships, intimacies, and close relationships with worldly people.” We cannot help meeting many unconverted people as long as we live. We cannot avoid having association with them, and doing business with them, unless we “leave this world” (1 Corinthians 5:10). To treat them with the utmost courtesy, kindness, and charity, whenever we do meet them, is a positive duty. But acquaintance is one thing, and intimate friendship is quite another. To seek their society without cause, to choose their company, and to cultivate intimacy with them, is very dangerous to the soul. Human nature is such that we cannot associate with other people without it having an effect on our own character. The old proverb will never fail to prove true: “Tell me with whom a man chooses to live, and I will tell you what he is.” The Scripture says expressly, “He who walks with the wise grows wise, but a companion of fools suffers harm” (Proverbs 13:20). If then a Christian who desires to live consistently, chooses friends who don’t care to live consistently, chooses friends who don’t care for their souls, or the Bible, or God, or Christ, or holiness, or regard them as secondary in importance, it seems to me impossible for him to prosper in Christianity. He will soon find that their ways are not his ways, nor their thoughts his thoughts, nor their tastes his tastes; and that unless they change, he must give up friendship with them. In short, there must be separation. Of course such separation will be painful. But if we have to choose between the loss of a friend and the injury of our souls, there ought to be no doubt in our minds. If friends will not walk in the narrow way with us, we must not walk in the broad way to please them. But let us distinctly understand that to attempt to keep up close intimacy between a converted and an unconverted person, if both are consistent with their natures, is to attempt an impossibility.

This principle ought to be remembered by all unmarried Christians in the choice of a husband or wife. I fear it is too often entirely forgotten. Too many seem to think of everything except religion in choosing a partner for life, or to suppose that it will come somehow as a matter of course. Yet when a Bible reading, praying, God-fearing, Christ-loving, Church-honoring Christian marries a person who takes no interest whatever in serious Christianity, what can the result be but injury to the Christian, or immense unhappiness? Health is not infectious, but disease is! As a general rule, in such cases, the good go down to the level of the bad, and the bad do not come up to the level of the good.

But this I say confidently to every unmarried Christian man or woman - if you love your soul, if you do not want to fall away and backslide, if you do not want to destroy your own peace and comfort for life, resolve never to marry any person who is not a true and devoted Christian, whatever the resolution may cost you. It would be better for you to die than to marry an unbeliever. Hold on to this resolution, and let no one ever persuade you out of it. Depart from this resolution, and you will find it almost impossible to “come out from among them and be separate.” You will find you have tied a mill-stone around your own neck in running the race towards heaven; and, if saved in the end, it will be “as one escaping through the flames” (1 Corinthians 3:15).

I offer these general hints to all who wish to follow Paul’s advice, and to come out from the world and be separate. In giving them, I lay no claim to infallibility; but I believe they deserve consideration and attention. I do not forget that the subject is full of difficulties, and that many doubtful cases are continually arising in a Christian’s life, in which it is very hard to say what is the path of duty, and how to behave. Perhaps the following bits of advice may be found useful.

1. In all doubtful cases we should first pray for wisdom and sound judgment. If prayer is worth anything, it must be especially valuable when we desire to do right, but do not see our way

2. In all doubtful cases let us often judge ourselves by remembering that God has His eye on us. Should I go to such and such and such a place, or do such and such a thing, if I really believed God is looking at me.
3. In all doubtful cases let us never forget the Second Coming of Christ and the day of judgment. Would I like to be found in such and such company, or employed in such and such ways?
4. In all doubtful cases let us find out what the conduct of the holiest and best Christians has been under similar circumstances. If we do not clearly see our own way, we need not be ashamed to follow good examples.

I make these suggestions for the use of all who are in difficulties about disputable points in the matter of separation from the world. I cannot help thinking that they may help to untie many knots, and solve many problems.

4. The Secrets to Real Victory Over the World.”

To come out from the world of course is not an easy thing. It cannot be easy so long as human nature is what it is, and a busy devil is always near us. It requires a constant struggle and exertion; it entails incessant conflict and self-denial. It often places us in exact opposition to members of our own families, to relatives, and neighbors, it sometimes obliges us to do things which give great offense, and bring on us ridicule and petty persecution. It is precisely this which makes many hang back and shrink from resolute Christianity. They know they are not right; they know that they are not so “thorough” in Christ’s service as they ought to be, and they feel uncomfortable and ill at ease. But the fear of man keeps them back. And so they linger on through life with aching, dissatisfied hearts - with too much Christianity to be happy in the world, and too much of the world to be happy in their Christianity. I fear this is a very common case, if the truth were known.

The first secret to victory over the world is a right heart. By that I mean a heart renewed, changed and sanctified by the Holy Spirit—a heart in which Christ dwells, a heart in which old things have passed away, and all things become new. The grand mark of such a heart is the bias of its tastes and affections. The owner of such a heart no longer likes the world and the things in the world, and therefore finds it no trial or sacrifice to give them up. He no longer has any appetite for the company, the conversation, the amusements, the occupations, and the books which he once loved. To “come out” from them seems natural to him. Great indeed is the explosive power of a new principle! Just as the new spring - buds replace the old leaves and make them fall to the ground, the new believer lets fall away from his soul sinful thoughts and practices, and replaces them with new living thoughts given by the Holy Spirit. Let him that wants to “come out from among them and be separate,” make sure first and foremost that he has received a new heart. If the heart is really right, everything else will be right in time. “If your eyes are good, your whole body will be full of light” (Matthew 6:22). If the affections are not right, there never will be right action.

The second secret to victory over the world is a “lively practical faith” in unseen things. What does the Scripture say? “This is the victory that has overcome the world, even our faith” (1John 5:4). The invisible becomes visibly-set before our minds every day when we meditate on the grand realities of our souls, God, Christ, heaven, hell, judgment, and eternity. Doing so causes us to cherish an abiding conviction that what we do not see is just as real as what we do see, and ten thousand times more important. This is one way to be conquerors over the world. This was the faith which made the noble army of saints, described in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, obtain such a glorious testimony from the Holy Spirit. They all acted under a firm persuasion that they had a real God, a real Savior, and real home in heaven, though unseen by mortal eyes. Armed with this faith, a man regards this world as a shadow compared to the world to come, and cares little for its praise or blame, its hatred or its rewards. Let him that wants to come out from the world and be separate, not be fearful and shrink back; but pray and strive to have this faith. “Everything is possible for him who believes” (Mark 9:23). Like Moses, he will not care what he loses and who is displeased, because he sees afar off, like one looking through a telescope, a substantial recompense of reward. (Hebrews 11:26).

The third and last secret of victory over the world is to attain and cultivate the “habit of boldly confessing Christ” on all proper occasions. In saying this I don’t want to be misunderstood. I want to blow a trumpet before Him, and thrust His Christianity on others all the time. But I do wish to encourage all who strive to come out from the world to show their colors, and to act and speak out like men who are not ashamed to serve Christ. A steady, quiet assertion of our own principles, as Christians—a habitual readiness to let the children of the world see that we are guided by other rules than they are, and do not mean to swerve from them—a calm, firm, courteous maintenance of our own standard of things in every company—all this will insensibly form a habit within us, and make it comparatively easy to be a separate man. It will be hard at first, no doubt, and cost us many a struggle; but the longer we go on, the easier it will be. Repeated acts of confessing Christ will produce habits. Habits once formed will produce a settled character. Once our characters are known, we shall be saved a lot of trouble. Men will know what to expect of us, and will count it no strange thing if they see us living the lives of separate peculiar people. It is a great thing to be able to say, “No” decidedly, but courteously, when asked to do anything which conscience says is wrong. He that shows his colors boldly from the first, and is never ashamed to let men see “whose he is and whom he serves,” will soon find that he has overcome the world and will be let alone. Bold confession is a long step towards victory.

The danger of the world ruining the soul, the nature of true separation from the world, and the secrets of victory over the world have been discussed. I wish to conclude this subject with a short word of application.

Are you overcoming the world, or are you overcome by it? Do you know what it is to come out from the world and be separate or are you still entangled by it, and conformed to it? If you have any desire to be saved, I entreat you to answer this question.

If you know nothing of “separation” I warn you that your soul is in great danger. The world passes away; and they who cling to the world, and think only of the world, will pass away with it to everlasting ruin. Wake up and see your peril before it is too late. Awake and flee from the wrath to come. The time is short. The end of all things is at hand. The shadows are lengthening. The sun is going down. The night comes when no man can work. The great white throne will soon be set. The judgment will begin. The books will be opened. Awake, and come out from among the world while it is called today.

Yet a little while, and there will be no more worldly occupations and worldly amusements - no more getting money and spending money - no more eating, and drinking, and feasting, and dressing, and dancing and theaters, and races, and cards, and gambling. What will you do when all these things have passed away forever? How can you possibly be happy in an eternal heaven, where holiness is all in all, and worldliness has no place? Oh consider these things, and be wise! Awake, and flee from the wrath to come.

If you want to come out of the world, but don't know what to do, take the advice which I give you this day. Begin by applying direct, as a repenting sinner, to our Lord Jesus Christ, and put your case in His hands. Pour out your heart before Him. Tell Him your whole story, and keep nothing back. Tell Him that you are a sinner wanting to be saved from the world, the flesh, and the devil, and plead with Him to save you.

Our blessed Savior “who gave Himself for our sins to rescue us from the present evil age” (Galatians 1:4). He knows what the world is, for He lived in it thirty-three years. He knows what the difficulties of a man are, for He was made man for our sakes, and dwelt among men. High in heaven, at the right hand of God, He is able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by Him - able to keep us from the evil of this world while we are still living in it - able to give us power to become the sons of God - able to keep us from falling - able to make us more than conquerors. Once more I say, “Go directly to Christ with the prayer of faith, and put yourself completely and unreservedly in His hands.” Hard as it may seem to you now to come out from the world and be separate, you shall find that with Jesus nothing is impossible. You, even you, shall overcome the world.

I would like to encourage you that if you have experienced what it means to come out from the world, take comfort and persevere, you are on the right road and have no cause to be afraid. The everlasting hills are in sight. Your salvation is nearer than when you first believed. Take comfort and press on.

No doubt you have had many a battle, and made many a false step. You have sometimes felt ready to faint, and been half disposed to go back to Egypt. But your Master has never entirely left you, and He will never allow you to be tempted above that you are able to bear. Then persevere steadily in your separation from the world, and never be ashamed of standing alone. Settle it firmly in your mind that the most dedicated Christians are always the happiest, and remember that no one ever said at the end of his course that he had been too holy, and lived too near to God.

The Scriptures say, “Whoever confesses me before men, the Son of Man will also confess him before the angels of God” (Luke 1:8)

“No one who has left home and brothers and sisters or mother or father or children or fields for me and the gospel will fail to receive a hundred times as much in this present age (homes, brothers, sisters, mothers, children and fields—and with them, persecutions) and in the age to come eternal life: (Mark 10:29-30.

“Do not throw away your confidence; it will be richly rewarded. You need to persevere so that when you have done the will of God, you will receive what he has promised. For in just a very little while, “He who is coming will come and will not delay” (Hebrews 10:35-37)

Those words were written and spoken for our sakes. Let us lay hold of them, and never forget them. Let us persevere to the end, and never be ashamed of coming out from the world, and being separate. We may be sure it brings its own reward.
